The Most Significant $10 of Your Life

The Golden battle lines are drawn and the first day was a bloody one.

The forward line for the bulls are drawn at $1,254, while the forward line for the bears is now $1,263.

It's nary a $10 difference, that on any other day would not concern myself, nor the large interests currently in the thick of battle. But for now, that very narrow range is in the midst of being attacked hard and fast.

This morning's gyrations were nerve racking, but held on the upper and lower ends.

Right now long term positions are likely best held, while short term positions should have tight stops. I expect this trading range to be broken shortly and this may very well end up being the year's most profitable trade if it's played correctly.

There are several methods to trade this move, some risky, some safer. Personally I like to mix it up with stocks or ETF's as well as options to leverage the move and really lather the icing on the cake.

We need to see a break one way or another, and once that break is confirmed then that will likely be the trend for months.

My partial bet is already for a higher price, but that could change very quickly. The market is always right one way or another.

Gold will go higher eventually, and it looks as if it will right now, but even if we do see a correction it's nothing more than another great sale on physical gold.

Taking a gander at the ETF GLD shows that the real battle was waged in the futures pits. The full days volume was mediocre at best which means there is no conviction one way or another, or people simply are steering towards the physical product instead of the ETF.

This was just a quick note, to note the incredible action today. If you're already subscribed, be ready. There's going to be some good money made soon, and if you're not subscribed, it's not too late!

Enjoy the show!
